This course takes students on an intellectual journey through the development of modern political philosophy starting from the 16th century. It analyzes how modern thinkers—especially Machiavelli, Hobbes, Locke, and Rousseau—approached concepts such as the state, power, freedom, and citizenship. Topics such as social contract theories, liberalism, theories of freedom, sovereignty, and democracy are explored through philosophical texts, contemporary examples, and class discussions. In addition to engaging with classical political texts, students are also encouraged to formulate their own political and ethical questions.
